Whether you act for employers or employees and whatever your level of expertise, we can devise and deliver training that is tailored to your organisation's needs.

Our training is offered from fully accessible central London venues, BUT if you prefer we can come to you.

All our courses are devised on the premise that people learn best when they are enjoying themselves. We use real cases and role plays supported by detailed written materials so that you can focus on learning rather than writing.

OUR TRAINERS:

ELIZABETH GEORGE

Before transferring to the Bar in 2005, Elizabeth practiced as an employment solicitor for 6 years and has extensive experience in employment law and practice, acting for both Respondents and Claimants. Elizabeth trained as a Barrister at Cloisters, and is now employed as our in-house Counsel. Elizabeth has devised and presented training for various organisations, including MIND, the Equality & Human Rights Commission, Citizens Advice Bureaus, Islington People's Rights, LAGER and Age Concern. Elizabeth believes the law is a practical tool for solving problems and her courses have been praised for the clarity of their content and her lively and interactive delivery. Elizabeth is a member of the Discrimination Law Association.

LAWRENCE DAVIES

Lawrence qualified as a solicitor in the City in 1994 and before founding Equal Justice in 2005, worked as an employment specialist in the private sector (Anthony Gold and Imran Khan & Partners) and in the voluntary sector. In 2001 Lawrence established, and subsequently managed, the London Discrimination Unit. He has lectured in law at London Metropolitan University and Kingston College. He co-authored the employment law chapters in Penguin's New Guide to the Law (2004). His experience in high profile discrimination cases (e.g. the cases of Baby P whistleblower; Colin Cook; Amjad Farooq & Megan Thomas) means that he frequently appears on television and in various newspapers and has a unique insight into dealing with the media.
